Recognition:

Proxy Foods, LLC (DBA Community Co-Pack NW) is a low-barrier contract manufacturer that incubates and scales BIPOC- and women-led businesses. They are activating a community-oriented production facility that flips the narrative on the co-packing experience and centers it on the maker. Through this work, they foster a more equitable and inclusive consumer products industry.

About:

Proxy Foods, LLC has been in business since 2012 as a consumer products consulting business. However, when founder Christopher Bailey saw a need for low-barrier contract manufacturing in late 2020, he shifted the business' focus. Chris is a micro-enterprise developer with the Portland Mercado, the Northwest's only Latino market hall and business incubator. He has worked with 50+ businesses to help take their ideas to the marketplace. For his work with the Portland Mercado he was awarded a Willamette Week Skidmore Prize. As an entrepreneur, he has developed a line of products for New Seasons Market and has won a 2019 Good Food Award. Prior to his role at Mercado he specialized in operations and logistics as a national expansion manager with Dinner Lab, a startup recognized by Fast Company as "most innovative" in the food and hospitality sector, and worked as a research chef in product and process development at Oregon State University's Food Innovation Center. He also does food product design with New Seasons Market, developing a line of value-added products under their partner brand banner. Chris serves on the board of directors for Built Oregon and an advisory committee member for Oregon Entrepreneurs Network. He is also a member of the Good Food Foundation's Equity Task Force, building equitable practices into various areas of the craft food industry.
